

Alexis: If you are color blind and you don't see my color, you also don't see the experiences that I go through on a routine basis as a result of my color. You don't get to celebrate the wonderful pieces of color that come along with it, but I think about if you're color blind... My biological son, when he goes into a store, if he's with his white friends, he gets through, and nothing happens. If he is going in with his friends of color or by himself, he's asked for a receipt. If you don't take the time to stop, if you don't take the time to be able to have an open dialogue because you're color blind and these things don't happen and don't matter, you're missing what he's experiencing and how you need to guide him through that.
